Jones describes their process as an act of feeling and imagining innerwise, oscillating between figuration and abstraction. 'Inner-' here refers to irreducible spaces necessary for refusing, for living, for imagining beyond—tilling an autobiographical ground for discursive reflections and formations. The artist's practice explores quiet photography and haptic memory, critical love and home buildin', assemblage and nigga riggin', and abstraction and the burden of identity. Currently, Jones is working on their forthcoming monograph, on the edge of a dream: one last dance with/in flesh.

The project attends to the sensations of the *unseen*—considering how making oneself constantly visible jeopardizes safety when living in a surveillance state. It's a veritable attempt at seeing blknness untimely as a way to expand being. At once, edge of a dream invites you to a time where seeing isn't everything.
